CRANE RECALLS THE EARLY DAYS

Noted Actor Played First in Texas at El Paso, Many Years Ago—Surprised at Growth

"I am making my golden jubilee tour this season in my private car, and let me tell you that private life has solved the one-night stand problem in a manner truly delightful to contemplate," said Wm. H. Crane, veteran American actor, today. "No more horrors of inferior hotel accommodations, or mid dashes for the trains. We have all of the comforts of home right there in the car, including bath, library, smoking room, dining compartment, drawing room and everything which tends toward making life comfortable and worth while. The 'crane' really 'keeps house' aboard his car."

We are covering an extensive stretch of territory, and do not memorize what to me a very happy period of my life. The reason I was anxious to have the southwest included in the itinerary was because I think in a big sense this section typifies a greater measure of the marvelous development of this country than any other section which I can recall.

You people who live here and have seen this section, and its towns and cities grow by inches can not realize how wonderful this is. We who only lived in the east, and saw the country, however, can see at a glance the concrete example of what you have grown from a frontier to a great nation. I tell you it is astonishing in its reach and progress.

SHOOTING AND ANIMAL ACT.

Madeline Del Ray certainly can shoot. With her human hand she can shoot many thrills at her opening exhibition at the Hippodrome Monday night. With an assistant standing behind a paper screen, she will shoot at a target, making the figure of the man, the bullet coming close to his head, but always missing the human target.

Such little things as breaking glass balls held on small sticks close to the head of the target, were easy, but the target bats his eyes as the glass breaks. The act also includes shooting the light from a clear, breaking an apple out of the man's head and smashing clay targets surrounding the man's body. In this exhibition the shooter holds her bow in the natural position, then turns it over, holding the stock to her head and sighting along the underside of the gun barrel. A bullet also snuffs out the fire as the man holds clear targets. Hitting a swinging target every time it moves backward and forward and ringing the bells of a target behind which a man is standing, are other difficult feats which Madeline Del Ray performs with apparent ease. With the slingshot she also rings the gong repeatedly.

The exhibition closes with Madeline entering the cage of lions and playing with Jimmie, a pet which she says she has had since he was seven days old. Jimmie is now past two years of age and she can no longer keep him in a house, but in his cage Jimmie rolls on his back and plays with the lash of a whip like a kitten plays with a string, and caresses his trainer with his paw. Del, the female of the species, which is more deadly than the male, is not so friendly, and Madeline keeps a safe distance from Del, who works her jaws as though always hungry. After the trainer sweeps out their cage, the lions cheer the bars vigorously as the beef which consists of their evening meal is thrown into their cage.

Jimmie, the pet lion, she says, was born near San Francisco and was mothered by a bulldog until old enough to take care of himself.

THE HIPPODROME.

At the Hippodrome tonight, Miss Delray, the champion woman rifle shot of the world, will be seen in exhibition shooting and with her trained lions. The female lion in her cage has killed two men and is one of the most dangerous animals now in training and cannot be trusted even by the who raised it from a cub. Don't forget the homelike place where you can come and enjoy yourself for 10c; no "easy mark" postals to sting you with; gentlemen to assist you to enjoyment; no four-flushing. If it is meritorious, we have it; if not, we cut them out. Our desire is to please our patrons and give them the most of the money, and something different. This lion act is the only act of its kind and has played all over the circuit. Admission is only 10c.—Adv.

AMUSEMENTS.

"THE SENATOR KEEPS HOUSE."

"It is the best thing I have seen since Warfield was here," declared a woman who tonight should go to her automobile in front of the El Paso theater after witnessing the performance of "The Senator Keeps House," by William H. Crane and company.

This may have been a little enthusiastic exaggeration, but it is hard to find anything that has pleased 21 seasons better since Mr. Warfield's visit. William H. Crane has for half a century been one of the leading lights of the American stage, with age he is improving, if anything. No more delicious bit of acting has been seen anywhere than that of the veteran actor in his present American comedy, which is built around the life of a widower senator who has trouble getting housekeepers and finally gets one that makes him so happy he can't get along without her, and doesn't. A claim against the government, in which she figures as the principal unknown for a time to him, gives the production its plot. Two young people, two negro servants, a congressman who is not so careful of his moral scruples when money is concerned, a dashing, scheming widow and a G. A. R. veteran are the rest of the characters. All are well cast in fact. Mr. Crane's support is all that could be expected, even for a company surrounding such a capable actor as himself.

Harry Harwood as the congressman is exceptionally clever, and Mabel Bert as Mrs. Fowler, the housekeeper, is also splendidly cast.

The performance is in four acts, magnificently set.

There is not a dull moment in the play; it is not boisterous fun, but gentle, subtle humor. It is its gentleness, its subtlety, its exquisite finish, that make the play; by a less capable company it would be very ordinary; by Mr. Crane and his company, it is more than a treat.
